The Wells and Fargo Line

Come and listen to my story, I'll not detain you long,
A-singing and a-humming
this simple and silly song.
'Tis of the old ex-convicts, the men who served their time For robbing mountain stages on the Wells and Fargo line.

Oh, there was Major Thompson turned up the other day, He said that he would hold them up or the devil would be to pay.
For he could hold a rifle and draw a bead so fine Upon those shotgun messengers of the Wells and Fargo line.

And there was Jimmy Miner who thought he was a thief, But he surely did prove himself to be a dirty sneak;
And now behind San Quentin's walls
he's serving out his time, For giving tips to old Jim Hughes
on the Wells and Fargo Line.
And there's still another who well did play his part, He's known among the mountains as the highwayman, Black Bart..
He'd ride those mountain jerkies,
to him it was but pleasure; He'd ride the trail both night and day for the Wells and Fargo treasure.

And now my story's ended,
I've not detained you long,
A-singing and a-humming
this simple and silly song.
And though the nights are long, boys,
and weary grows the time,
But when we are out we'll ride again
the Wells and Fargo line.

≈

From Songs of the Wild West with commentary by Alan Axelrod and arrangements by Dan Fox. Published by The Metropolitan Museum of Art in association with the Buffalo Bill Historical Center and Simon & Schuster Books for Young Readers, 1991.