

Dedicated Groves in Redwood Parks

In 1918, Save the Redwoods League was established to protect California's remaining redwood forests for current and future generations to experience and enjoy.

Visitors to these tranquil places stand in awe as they realize that trees thousands of years old can touch the heart and bring it peace. Many have found it fitting to honor those they love and respect by dedicating a tree or grove in their memory. Since 1921, the League's Grove Program has given supporters a chance to dedicate a special place in the forest. Donations for honor and memorial groves provide funding for future acquisitions and restoration efforts.

Together with the State of California and California State Parks, the League has helped ensure the survival and continuing legacy of these precious redwood forests by connecting people to their magnificence.

As you hike through our redwood parks, you will see markers or signs in honor of groups or individuals who have contributed significantly to the protection of the redwood forests or have made vital sacrifices for their country or other worthwhile causes.

Dedicated Groves in Redwood Parks

In 1918, Save the Redwoods League was established to protect California's remaining redwood forests for current and future generations to experience and enjoy.

Visitors to these tranquil places stand in awe as they realize that trees thousands of years old can touch the heart and bring it peace. Many have found it fitting to honor those they love and respect by dedicating a tree or grove in their memory. Since 1921, the League's Grove Program has given supporters a chance to dedicate a special place in the forest. Donations for honor and memorial groves provide funding for future acquisitions and restoration efforts.

Together with the State of California and California State Parks, the League has helped ensure the survival and continuing legacy of these precious redwood forests by connecting people to their magnificence.

As you hike through our redwood parks, you will see markers or signs in honor of groups or individuals who have contributed significantly to the protection of the redwood forests or have made vital sacrifices for their country or other worthwhile causes.

Dedicated Groves in Redwood Parks

In 1918, Save the Redwoods League was established to protect California's remaining redwood forests for current and future generations to experience and enjoy.

Visitors to these tranquil places stand in awe as they realize that trees thousands of years old can touch the heart and bring it peace. Many have found it fitting to honor those they love and respect by dedicating a tree or grove in their memory. Since 1921, the League's Grove Program has given supporters a chance to dedicate a special place in the forest. Donations for honor and memorial groves provide funding for future acquisitions and restoration efforts.

Together with the State of California and California State Parks, the League has helped ensure the survival and continuing legacy of these precious redwood forests by connecting people to their magnificence.

As you hike through our redwood parks, you will see markers or signs in honor of groups or individuals who have contributed significantly to the protection of the redwood forests or have made vital sacrifices for their country or other worthwhile causes.

How Are Groves Dedicated?

During the League's early days, donors could contribute either the actual cost of a grove, or they could purchase the property outright and deed it to the League as a gift. The League then deeded the property to the State of California for permanent protection and public enjoyment.

The first grove established—the Bolling Grove—was dedicated in 1921 in honor of Colonel Raynal Bolling, the first high-ranking U.S. officer killed in combat during World War I. The Bolling Grove is now a part of Humboldt Redwoods State Park.

Today, grove donors are able to provide funds directly to the League to support redwood forests statewide, including redwood state parks. Groves are established by the California State Parks Commission. The designations are honorary in nature and do not involve the transfer of real property or monetary value to or from donors.

With more than 187,000 acres of redwood forest and associated lands under their protection, and the creation of 62 redwood parks and reserves, the Grove Program continues the important work of Save the Redwoods League.

Donations for honor and memorial groves provide funding for future land acquisitions and forest restoration efforts.

Learn more at
SaveTheRedwoods.org/dedicate
or call (888) 836-0005

How Are Groves Dedicated?

During the League's early days, donors could contribute either the actual cost of a grove, or they could purchase the property outright and deed it to the League as a gift. The League then deeded the property to the State of California for permanent protection and public enjoyment.

The first grove established—the Bolling Grove—was dedicated in 1921 in honor of Colonel Raynal Bolling, the first high-ranking U.S. officer killed in combat during World War I. The Bolling Grove is now a part of Humboldt Redwoods State Park.

Today, grove donors are able to provide funds directly to the League to support redwood forests statewide, including redwood state parks. Groves are established by the California State Parks Commission. The designations are honorary in nature and do not involve the transfer of real property or monetary value to or from donors.

With more than 187,000 acres of redwood forest and associated lands under their protection, and the creation of 62 redwood parks and reserves, the Grove Program continues the important work of Save the Redwoods League.

Donations for honor and memorial groves provide funding for future land acquisitions and forest restoration efforts.

Learn more at
SaveTheRedwoods.org/dedicate
or call (888) 836-0005

How Are Groves Dedicated?

During the League's early days, donors could contribute either the actual cost of a grove, or they could purchase the property outright and deed it to the League as a gift. The League then deeded the property to the State of California for permanent protection and public enjoyment.

The first grove established—the Bolling Grove—was dedicated in 1921 in honor of Colonel Raynal Bolling, the first high-ranking U.S. officer killed in combat during World War I. The Bolling Grove is now a part of Humboldt Redwoods State Park.

Today, grove donors are able to provide funds directly to the League to support redwood forests statewide, including redwood state parks. Groves are established by the California State Parks Commission. The designations are honorary in nature and do not involve the transfer of real property or monetary value to or from donors.

With more than 187,000 acres of redwood forest and associated lands under their protection, and the creation of 62 redwood parks and reserves, the Grove Program continues the important work of Save the Redwoods League.

Donations for honor and memorial groves provide funding for future land acquisitions and forest restoration efforts.

Learn more at
SaveTheRedwoods.org/dedicate
or call (888) 836-0005

